I should have talked to you folks before I got myself into this mess, but I am hoping you could help me.

I wanted to hire my Thai wife's brother into my construction company. I tried to do the LMO myself, so I posted a job on Job Bank and Kijiji and made the qualifications as strict as possible and kept the salary as low as possible to discourage Canadian applicants. But I ended up getting 100s of resumes!

Summer construction season is here and I need to get him down right away, so I don't think I have time to post another job advertisement. Do you think you could help me get an LMO even though I have 100s of Canadians wanting that job?

I am willing to pay top dollar if you can help me out here.

Jimmy

I live quite far away, but I am still happy to come and talk to the lawyer. Just two things though:

1. Would the lawyer be able to find a way around the fact that there are suitable Canadian candidates?
2. How successful has she been with cases like this in the past?

Sorry for asking these questions, but this is very important to me, so I want to make sure I pick the right lawyer the first time.

Ms. Crossley is a high qualify lawyer, as she has done numerously LMO applications and her rate of success is high.

Trust me when I say that she would find a way around the fact that there are suitable Canadian candidates, she is very creative
